Subject: Regulation Change

To Whom it may concern,

I would like to propose the following regulation change to big game drawing.

I would like to see an max preference point or cap added to each species. The system is set up to favor those hunters that have applied but not been drawn. However, this severely disadvantage young hunters and those that got into the sport later in life. Since it is a lottery system already I feel that a max preference point should be added to equalize the playing field after a period of time especially on the hardest to draw tags.

I would suggest a cap on preference points by the following:

Big Horn Sheep - 10 points/10 years
Antelope - 10 points/10 years
Elk - 10/10 years
Deer - 5/5 years

I feel after 10 years and 5 years respectfully, everyone should have the same opportunity at these elusive hunts. It would also allow those that apply as parties or want to apply as a party but may not all have same points, to reach a max at some point without hurting their chances.

The second regulation change, would to be remove the big horn sheep from the preference point system all together. Given that their are only 10-15 tags awarded each year, that I would rather pay more to enter a 100% lottery and have equal shot at all tags in lieu of the preference point. That there is not enough tags awarded a year to warrant a preference point distribution. There is not enough change or rollover at the top. That individuals who jumped on the preference point system at year one are bogged down, but should not necessarily have more right to 75% of the tags then the rest of us. It is hard enough to get this hunt everyone should have an equal opportunity regardless. Preference point and awarding to max points for 75% of the tags is unjust to the other applicants fighting for a .005% chance on 3 tags.

Sincerely,

Jeff Seacrist
